A commercial driving licence is required to drive school buses. In addition to acquiring a CDL, bus drivers typically have to complete up to three months of additional training. Commercial driver's licenses are required to drive special vehicles such as buses, tractor trailers and tanks. In addition to acquiring a CDL, both passenger and school bus endorsements are also required. Although they vary from state to state, the requirements for obtaining a CDL typically include a vehicle inspection test, a basic control test and a road test. When all requirements are met, a CDL is issued by the applicant's state-certified examiner. By Jeff Grundy If you have multiple computers in your home, Windows 7 makes it easy to share files and folders in a home network. Although earlier versions of Windows allowed you to create a local area network, Windows 7 makes it as simple as a few mouse clicks to give access to your shared files and folders. After you create a home network, other people in your home can access, copy, and even open the files in your shared folders. Connecting to a shared folder over the network is a task that almost anyone can perform. Right-click the Windows Start button, and then click Open Windows Explorer in the pop-up list. Scroll to and click the Network link on the left side of the window. Wait for Windows to load the local network information and create a list of computers on your home network. Click the icon for the network computer that has the shared folder you want to access. Go to the shared folder and click its name to open it. Enter a user name and password if prompted, and press the Enter key. In most cases, you are not required to enter a user name and password to sign in to a shared folder. However, a user may choose to restrict access to specific shared folders, creating the need to enter a user name and password. Community colleges and continuing education programs often offer the course needed to obtain a commercial driver's license and work as a professional truck driver. But some aspiring truckers can't afford the course or might not want to take on debt to pay for it. One option is to participate in a company-sponsored CDL program. Since 1992, the Department of Transportation has required all commercial truck drivers to have a commercial driver's license or CDL. CDL is issued by state governments in several different categories, including Class B for trucks weighing more than 26,000 pounds, and Class A for combined vehicles with a total weight over 26,000 pounds, such as tractor trailers. The training needed to pass the state CDL exam takes between four and six weeks and between 160 and 240 hours of training, including classroom and road time. Although CDL training is available from many colleges, trucking companies also offer their own CDL training programs for drivers. Each company-sponsored program has its own rules, but some them are structured so that is free of charge if the driver works for the company for a period after graduation. Others require the driver to pay back the cost of tuition, but will deduct it from the driver's paycheck if he works for the company. Some offer a paid training period. Always research the details of any company-sponsored CDL program thoroughly before deciding to sign up for it. Companies charge different tuition rates, offer different payment plans and charge different interest rates. Most companies do not pay drivers during the CDL course itself, but drivers are paid a fixed weekly rate during the training period after receiving CDL. Some companies reward driver loyalty by paying back CDL tuition after a period of time. For example, Schneider CDL Training's tuition takes about 18 months to pay off through a payroll deduction, but drivers who keep working for the company for two years receive a bonus greater than the cost of tuition, so in effect CDL training is all paid training, as long as the driver stays with the company for two years. The median pay for heavy and tractor-trailer truck drivers was $37,770 a year in 2010, according to the Bureau of Labor Statistics. The commercial truck driving business is expected to grow at a rate of 21 percent by 2020, which is a higher than average rate compared to other jobs. The BLS considers training a commercial driver's license to be short-term on job training, but mentions that drivers are generally expected to have prior related work experience of some sort. Hospitalization Patient Satisfaction Scores for fiscal year 2019 When we ended the fiscal year on June 30, we were pleased to see the hospitalization satisfaction score improve 23 points compared to last fiscal year – the best improvement over any department at JHH! HCAHPS is a post-discharge study sent to about 50 percent of our emissions that directly home. Patient feedback Patient Feedback that we improved in all sections, but especially in nursing communication. Compliments go to all staff who helped make this improvement possible! August DAISY Nominees Congratulations to this month's DAISY nominees: Ivo Awasum James Iringa Jennifer Abebrese Awarding one last wish: The MPCU Team and Supportive Care Team One of our patients recently had a seemingly impossible desire to see his beloved race car one last time before he passed. With three respiratory therapists, two nurses, a clinical technician, two large tanks of oxygen and help and coordination from others, he was able to hear his car roar one last time while surrounded by family. That's what works in health care, and I couldn't be happier to serve a team that makes wishes come true every day. I would also like to thank respiratory therapy for getting through the time apiece to make this happen. Securely closed the Wolfe street entrance for us to allow the car and well over 30 family members to be with the patient during this time. Both the palliative and CJ teams accompanied him as well. Everyone had a hand in making this happen, so I offer you one last thanks for everything you do every day! Joe Reinhart MSN, RN, Assistant nurse manager, MPCU Deepest condolences Our deepest condolences go out to Keisha Perrin, nurse manager, Nelson 8, who lost her 19-year-old son Keshon Nowlin due to a car accident on August 11. Keshon was a popular honor student at Bowie State University. A celebration of Keshon's life will be held on Tuesday, August 20. Staff from across the hospital are asked to cover shifts and provide support to Nelson 8 as well as MPCU, where Keisha previously worked. A driver's permit gives beginners drivers a chance to practice driving while learning the rules of the road. A few states allow license holders to drive to and from school on a license commonly called a school permit. The qualifications and limitations of these authorisations vary from state to state. A driving licence is a temporary driving licence which allows the holder of the licence to operate a motor vehicle within certain restrictions. This allows new drivers to practice while learning to drive. Driver restrictions vary by state, but the largest is the same in almost every state: A fully licensed driver must accompany the permit holder. While age restrictions vary, most states require the driver to be at least 14 to 16 years old. There are a few states that allow driver permit holders to drive alone to school on a particular type of permit commonly called a school permit. Each state has its own name: Iowa calls it a Minor School License. Police regarding school permits vary, so it's a good idea to check with your local DMV. Most states that offer school permits are agricultural states. These licenses arose to meet the needs of the farm who often needed to drive to school if their farm was off busing routes. Some common limitation of the normal driver permit is listed below: The driver and all passengers must always wear a seatbelt. Some states have restrictions on the number of passengers in the car as well as the age of passengers. If the driver is a minor most states will require that parents sign a guardianship statement. Most states will require a written test to be passed as well as proof of enrollment in a driver's degree. There are a number of states that offer school permits and they all have different criteria. In this article Iowa requirements and restrictions will be used as an example. Check your local MOTORV for your state guidelines. Below are the qualifications that a driver must meet to be eligible for a Minor School License (MSL) in Iowa. The MSL holder can operate a vehicle alone at 10:00 a.m. There are no exceptions or waivers. The msl holder can only travel the most direct and accessible route between the licensee's residence and school and to and from leisure activities in the school district. The student can also drive to a gas station for refueling as long as the service station is on the most direct and accessible route. Under Iowa state law, when a student has qualified for an MSL in Iowa, there are restrictions on when and where they can operate the vehicle alone. As stated on their website, a student must meet the following requirements: The student must have completed an Iowa-approved course in driver training. The student must have been in possession of a valid instructional authorisation during the six months immediately preceding the application for MSL. The student's driving history must be free of convictions for moving traffic violations, contributing accidents and license withdrawals during the six months immediately preceding the application. The student must live a mile or more from the school of enrollment The superintendent, chairman of the school board, or principal must determine eligibility and sign a declaration of necessity/affidavit for school license. The student's parent or guardian must also give signed consent to the declaration of necessity/affidavit for school license. License.
